Using a branded USB for providing information to clients, or prospects works incredibly well. Although, you should consider the size of the memory within the USB flash drive. As sometimes they are just too small to be useful. I have had a number given to me that just aren't worth using. Especially as I have a number of them kicking around now. So making sure that you spend a little extra to get more sizeable storage is certainly worth it. Then when someone needs portable storage, they are more likely to take yours with them. And then they will have your branding in their pocket at all times. Every time that they use it, they will of course see your logo, and perhaps a corporate message.
